You Wrote What? Code.org

Code.org is taking schools by storm, engaging students, teaching teamwork, and creating next generation programmers. Every student in every school should have the opportunity to learn computer science. Code.org is a project based program that allows students to create and discover the basics of programming. Jump into a world of gaming and exploration with Code.org.

Great America I and II

4:15—4:40 p.m.

Beta Chapter, Northwest Missouri State University
Drew Bruner, Marina Hayner, and Trey Frey

Plickers—Changing the Game

The game changer to quick formative assessment, Plickers is a powerfully simple tool that lets teachers collect real-time formative assessment data without the need for student devices. Students have a QR Code that allows teachers to scan and check for understanding. What a great way to engage students in critical thinking without having students feel self-conscious!

Great America I and II

eduBlogging

Blogs are becoming more prevalent in today's classroom. Blogs have a variety of uses but are commonly used to promote open dialogue and encourage community building through comments, exchange of opinions, ideas, and attitudes. This presentation will provide participants with an overview of traditional educational blogs and the various ways in which educators can integrate them into their instruction to create a more interactive and engaging environment.

“Why (K)not?”—Mrs. Robin Albrecht, Southern Business Education Association Past President and Teacher at Osbourn High School, Manassas, Virginia

It is amazing the possibilities that await you as you navigate this thing called life. It is time to take chances—and to take a lot of them. It is time to look at your skills, talents, and vision and see how you can motivate others toward a common goal. If you are hesitating, the question is Why (K)not?
